Decision

The President said that on the merits of the case there appeared to be no cause for not granting the application and no sense in leaving the couple in the tragic position in which they are today. But, infortunately, despite the good will on his part he was forced to dismiss the application, on legal grounds.

In explaining why he had perforce come to this conclusion, the President said that the Rabbincial Courts Jurisdiction Law had not repealed Article 55 of the Order in Council. So that, if a Rabblaical Court were granted jurisdiction hy the President

Article 55 there appeared to be no reason why it could not deal with mixed marriage and in the course of so doing where the couples have children, he emphasized.

At any rate, the President concluded, it would appear to be most urgent to introduce certain amendments into Article 56 of the Order in Council and he suggested the following: first, that right of application to the President of the Supreme Court should be granted when the question of personal status involves persons "of different religions" and not "of different religions" and not "of different religions on munities;" secondly, that the words "notwithstanding anything contained in the proviso to Article 58" be added; and, thirdly, that Article 55 should expressly be made operative in cases where one party to a marriage is not an Israeli resident, on condition that that party agree to accept the jurisdiction of the religious court concerned.

In conclusion, the President held that he would not dismiss the application outright but, in the hope that the legislator would give consideration at the earliest opportunity to the problems concerned and at least introduce the amendments to Article 55 as awiftly as possible, he decided to leave the application open for the meanwhile.

peared at least a million years ago, scientists at the British Association for the Advancement of Beience, were told Monday.

Dr. Kenneth Oakley, Deputy Keeper (Anthropology) at the natural history department of the British Museum said new light on man's age had been thrown by a radio-activity technique which depended on the decay of a radio-active isotope of potassium in rock into carbon.

Radio carbon dating had shown that a modern type man appeared about 40,000 years ago when Neanderthal man was dying out.

The age of the first man depended very much on a definition of man. Where man-like creatures were regularly making tools it could be inferred that they were capable of conceptual thought and establishing a a tradition and were in fact men, Dr. Oakley submitted.

The australopithecines—toothed mountain aper such as had been found in Central Africa—qualified under this definition, and the new technique showed an age of about a million years.

The gardens' fun fair will reopen, a children's theatre, "Tilion," will perform, and a night club will be run during the exhibition.

Mr. Roll's team of graphic artists will splash the country with brightly coloured posters advertising the exhibition. These posters will be a new departure in Israeli publicity both as far as lettering and colouring go, in keeping with Mr. Roll's declaration that "the exhibition will be a turning point in both graphic design and living styles."

MUSIC-lovers will be glad in to hear of the visit to Israel of Mr. and Mrs. Max Targ, founders of A.M.L.I. (Americans for a Music Library in Israel). This organization has sent to Israel in the course of ten years over 9,000 musical instruments, valued at over a million Israel pounds. Hardly any musical institution in Israel has not benefited in one way or another from A.M.L.I. In addition, four modern electronic organs have been received and two more are on the way for the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra and Kol Yisrael.

During their visit, Mr. and Mrs. Targ will be present at the planting of a J.N.F. forest in the vicinity of Kibbutz Grulot, which they have denated. nated.
On the initiative of Mr.

The Moledet's arrival boosts the number of Zim ships in service to 46 with a combined displacement of 400,000 tons. Four of these are liners, two are mixed passenger-cargo ships, four are tankers and the remainder cargo ships ranging from 800 to 23,000 tons. Twenty-three ships are to be added in the coming few years, and six of them are scheduled for delivery by 1983.

THE prototype of the tourist in latter-day Israeli mythology is an elderly American Jewish milliomire waying his camery tearfully at the country he loves so dearly and has helped so much. It is questionable whether this character ever existed off the stages of Israel's little theatres, but in any event Israeli tourism today is aimed at completely new types (without loaing interest in the well-heeled American Zionist). The tourist experts believe that it is now possible to get at visitors who will pay less for travel, bed, board and souvenirs but who will provide a vast new market for the country's tourism.

The industry has managed market for the country's tourism.

The industry has managed to get remarkably close to the targets set by the two U.S.O.M. Missions in 1965 and 1960 which virtually laid down a blueprint as to how tourism in this country should develop. The Missions estimated that 86,000 tourists would come in 1959, 110,000 in 1960 and 135,000 in 1961; the actual figures were 91,220 and 117,661 respectively, and this year the Government and 117,661 respectively, and this year the Government Tourist Corporation expects to reach 150,000 (by the end of July the score was 99,155). Interpreting these luscious statistics in terms of foreign currency earnings, 1960 brought $26,999,000 and this year we should clear $30m., both figures excluding indirect earnings from tourism by the national carriers and from sales of Israeli souvenirs and goods.

"A community of heart and spirit binds our two countries." said M. Villette of Loire-Atlantique, representing the district authorities. "When the flag flutters over the Moledet between Haifa and Marseilles, we shall not feel that this ship has left us altogether, for it will be the pride of your line," he concluded, addressing the representatives of Zim.

Afterwards the flag was alwely raised in profound silence on the part of the crowd that had gathered on the pier as well as of the invited guests on the ship's upper deck.

Two New Ships
After an address by the Consul-General of Israel in Paris, M. Rafacl Migdal, the Director of Zim's Planning Department, Mr. Zvi Yehieli, noted that the trial run of the Moledet had been followed by the signing of contracts for two new Israel ships to be built in France. He then appointed Captain Binyamin Berkovitch, a veteran of the Zim fleet, Master of the new liner, and the crowd stood silent as the strains of the anthems of the two nations rose in the misty air.

no popular tourism until there are more "B" and "C" hotels which are clean, comfortable and inexpensive. Naturally there is no limitation to the investment of private capital in luxury hotels, but Government influence (and the loans available through the Tourist Industry Development Corporation) will be used to encourage the cheaper type of building.

An impressive addition to popular tourism is the Mediterranean Club. Its Israeli enterprise brought two sur-
